Help Center The Radiant Network is for congregations and leaders with similar spiritual DNA who are allied in a shared vision of growing the kingdom. God designed us to succeed best in healthy relationships. We believe that this church network is a place where leaders can thrive and grow side by side. However, we understand that different churches and leaders have different needs and willingness to connect, and that is why we have created three potential participations in our network. Learn more & Our prayer was that we would find a network that could be reachable, alive and driven by the passionate depth of its approach. Being part of a vibrant network of biblical networks has been very important to me as a pastor in relation to our congregation and staff separately. This special group of shepherds is real, raw, and honest, and they have a ridiculous passion for Jesus and His church! I believe in the Radiant Network! - Shane Ogle, Lead Pastor of Great Lakes Church in Troy, MI We are one church in many places and homes in the kalamazoo community, our country and the world. While the holiday season can be a time of celebration, for others this can be a time of loneliness, depression and pain. Radiant is committed to raising radiant disciples through daily prayer and worship, connecting proportionally, growing up in a disciple, and providing you with a useful way to reach our pastoral group. In January, we dedicate 21 days to a special focused period of corporate prayer, fasting and worship. We invite you to pray before the Lord and ask the Holy Spirit for clarity and guidance on how you can for this 21-day fast. KALAMAZOO, MI -- A radiant church has reopened after more than 50 coronavirus cases joined the ministry. The church and related campuses in Portage and Richland were closed after staff and students were tested positive in four different counties in western Michigan.Prayer groups resumed Monday and weekend services are set to be implemented with extra precautions, but some members still don't feel enough is being done. The church decided to reopen after those tested positive were outside the quarantine period and felt they were recovering according to Department of Health standards, executive pastor Rick Burmeister said. Related: More than 50 cases of coronavirus, covering four counties associated with the Church of Western Michigan forchu's leadership, were reported to staff and students with symptoms on Monday, March 5. On Friday, 15 March, the 15th of July 2 He told the ministry that Radiant would continue the virtual service for another week, according to guidelines from the Kalamazoo County Health Department. We want to make sure that we are good neighbors and very wise and very careful, Lee said in the video. When we worship together in physical reality, we can count on those environments to be taken care of, and they are healthy and that there is no risk of anyone else being infected. Lee revealed that he and his wife Jane, the church's co-founder, were also tested positive for COVID-19. After a two-week virtual break, the church requires the use of masks only during entry and at the shrine. Inside, every second bench is roped off and participants in different economies are asked to sit separately from each other, Burmeister said. Guests are still given the choice of whether to wear a mask, but staff members must wear it during the service, except that worship staff will lead a prayer or song, Burmeister said. We balance our faith and mission with safety and health. Said. Related: The radiant church is expanding, opening a café in the center of Kalamazoo Monday's midday prayer group in the center of Kalamazoo, about a dozen people were inside as the live band played. Ministry students Melissa Speet, 18, and Zoe Whitlow, 19, said coronavirus requirements were stricter when reopening. They told MLive that those attending the prayer group were happy to wear masks. Some members said they still don't feel comfortable returning to personal service. Kellie Cody, 71, said she was a caretaker at the church's Richland facility. He refuses to return in person until the Ministry begins to follow the science. Richland Church, which Cody estimates can accommodate 1,000 people, opened in July at half capacity. Cody said he spoke with church leadership and the Department of Health with concerns. Cody called the reopening of the church a message misleading and inaccurate. He said he was discouraged when he heard shepherds calling the congregation to sing at the top of their lungs after the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention proposed suspending choirs after singing and singing related to the spread of COVID-19. The recording of Sunday, October 4, 2019, services at the ministry's Richland campus, was posted to the church's Facebook and showed a live band performing in front of an audience. What we were told sounded like they were doing everything right, Cody said. I don't think they've done anything right. The executive order of 15 June stated that social gatherings indoors must be held over 50 people. 250 indoor concert venues and 500,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000 were opened in the outdoor arenas, as in other executive orders, religious institutions and places of worship were exempted from penalties related to capacity or face mask authorization. Masks were encouraged but not authorized during the July reopening, Burmeister said. The Church did not want to control members too much and considered the coronavirus guidelines a combination of community health and personal responsibility, Burmeister said. If people wanted to come in and sing, they could do it, he said. If they want to wear masks, they can do so. When the church reopened in the summer, it practiced contactless interaction by removing donation buckets and comment cards, Burmeister said. He said the church deliberately limits the size of the participants in its children's service work because the church serves so many young families. The pastor estimates that about 20-25% of people returned. On three church campuses, regular personal attendances were at 4,000 before the COVID-19 pandemic. The congregation encouraged the elderly or those in the background to continue streaming services at home. Radiant's service broadcasts to Facebook encourage viewers at home to continue worshipping together. Cody said he thought the church's response to the pandemic was deceptive and minimized. He said he was surprised and. And, that he had not heard of any case coming from the church, so he called the county health department to ask if the cases were related to Radiant, but received no answers. A few days later, Cody discovered his suspicions were correct when MLive reported the outbreak after receiving a copy of a private list server warning of an ongoing outbreak. He said he didn't get a notification from Radiant because he doesn't use social media. I think they're downplaying the severity of this virus and how easily this virus is transmitted and how it's infected, Cody said. The Michigan Health Alert Network comes from contacts in the state of Michigan, local public health, hospitals, EMS agencies, federally qualified and rural health clinics, long-term care facilities, and emergency management. The public was not notified of the Radiant outbreak because the health department considered it restrained, Kalamazoo County Health Officer Jim Rutherford said. Two people are defined as outbreaks, so the health department often treats multiple outbreaks at once, Rutherford said. The outbreak of the radiant church was not considered dominant due to contact tracking work by provincial and church staff. The epidemic has increased and intensified tracing of contacts between church employees, Burmeister said. The parish's welfare checks have also been updated. Previously, a wellness check looked for symptoms such as fever, but those tested positive had allergies and cold symptoms such as running noses and sore throats, he said. MLive:Michigan also reported 2,909 new coronavirus cases, 21 new deaths sunday and Monday in the Kalamazoo apartment shooting was a good-hearted 20-year-oldMichigan list of 110 new coronavirus infections and 283 ongoing clusters in October.
